Briefing: Exploring additional trends in mixed-use retail and retail partnerships.

Takeaway: Coming out of the pandemic we've seen a number of pivots disrupt the retail industry. In the future, consumers will expect more from in-person retail be it through enhanced experiences or layered value presented by mixed-use space. We currently see this appear most commonly through limited-time pop-ups within a store, but as the retail industry catches up with consumer expectations its possible these outlets could be built into the infrastructure of the store itself.

Top Insights

Single Use-Reduction In-store refill stations are no longer specific to personal care

Trend - As brands look to become more eco-friendly, in-store refill stations are one way they're shifting toward sustainability. This shift includes everything from coffee refill stations to supermarket skincare refills. Insight - Sustainability will be a growing focus among businesses as more consumers demand that brands prioritize environmental friendliness in the wake of climate change's devastating impact around the world. These demands will only increase as the climate crisis worsens.

Wine Shops Restaurants convert to bottle shops in the wake of COVID-19

Trend - Restaurants across Toronto have been closed for nearly a year in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. To survive the economic turmoil, many have shifted into curated wine shops offering unique selections of vino to locals. These establishments offer a unique ambiance and aesthetic that replicates the experience of "going out." Insight - The COVID-19 pandemic has transformed the shopping and entertainment habits of many consumers. Accessing goods shifted from casual grocery store outings and shopping trips to curbside pickups and online delivery. As a result, consumers feel a nostalgic need to revisit the activities of their pre-pandemic life, seeking an excuse to be seen and interact safely with others.

Apparel Home Clothing brands expand their portfolio with the addition of home good products

Trend - Popular brands in the fashion space are expanding their portfolios to include home goods. These range from decor, bedding, dishware, and furniture that are available at accessible price points. Insight - Consumers are increasingly working from home, resulting in a desire to upgrade their living space. These individuals are looking for affordable ways to invest in the decor and functionality of their home. Thus, there is a greater need for cost-accessible options for those who can't afford home redesigns and renovations.

Shopping Locker Contactless lockers enhance the safety of shopping experiences

Trend - Lockers in the retail industry are being rolled out as businesses look for ways to keep both customers and employees safe amidst the ongoing pandemic. Everything from food pickup to in-store returns are now being exchanged via lockers to reduce instances of person-to-person contact. Insight - Consumers around the world are being more careful with how they spend their time and money, and limiting their contact with others outside the home. However, certain responsibilities and needs require some contact with the outside world. Brands that show they prioritize safe customer interactions are more likely to get business from cautious consumers.

Entrepreneurial Push

More individuals are embarking on the path of entrepreneurship amid COVID-19

Trend - Businesses are launching campaigns and resources that are meant to support individuals who are interested in becoming entrepreneurs during the COVID-19 pandemic. These activations offer important information and coaching for starting one's own business.

Insight - Many lost their job because of the COVID-19 pandemic and some individuals—those who were fortunate enough to be in a good financial position—have decided to channel their energy into starting their own business. For many, this might be a long-time dream, while for others, it might be motivated by an obstacle they were trying to overcome during the pandemic. This, in turn, creates a demand for various resources and coaching opportunities, allowing consumers to feel more confident in planning and managing their idea's execution.

The figure is a dashboard for article scoring. It features a large '8.8 Score' on the left. Below it are three horizontal bars for 'Popularity', 'Activity', and 'Freshness'. To the right of these bars are three identical sets of icons: a row of five female symbols, a row of five male symbols, and a row of five combined gender symbols. Below the icons are three identical text blocks: 'Demographics: The target audience. This value is determined by the researcher, not by site statistics.', 'Freshness: The relative newness of an article.', and 'Activity: The amount of people interacting with an article, including scrolling through images and sharing on social media. Something, like a bacon cupcake, might not be Popular, but could score high on Activity if people share it a lot.' Below these is another text block: 'Popularity: Scoring of appeal based on how many people choose an article when given other options in the same category or cluster.' At the bottom is a section titled 'Overall Score:' followed by the text: 'All scores translate into percentiles (8.8 = 88th percentile) and overall score is the average of Popularity, Activity and Freshness.'
